You can only measure one of many pillars of intelligence with those types of questions anyway. My underachieving, pot-smoking cousin likes to talk about how he has a supposed genius IQ, but he's one of the easiest people to manipulate and has never impressed me with intellectual insight.

Nikki, these neocon libertarians (I don't even know what to call them, because their philosophy is so contradictory) think that the only thing government has to do is protect our freedoms (most importantly safety)...and of course Christian values. I hope the US gets pinko medicine sooner than later. Even a mismanaged program will be better than the ss/medicare/medicaid clusterfuck we're currently subjected to. IQ is a pretty good indicator of intelligence, it's just that intelligence by itself doesn't mean a lot...

Also, apologies for derailing by going on about IQs, what I meant to say was simply that Bush wasn't hated for being republican.

now excuse me while I party some on behalf of America.
