
Subject: Re: How do I deal with cheat accusations?
Posted by Dover on Wed, 14 Apr 2010 01:25:19 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

R315r4z0r wrote on Tue, 13 April 2010 17:13Dover wrote on Mon, 12 April 2010 18:42R315r4z0r wrote on Mon, 12 April 2010 08:09Dover wrote on Mon, 12 April 2010 02:30snpr1101 wrote on Sun, 11 April 2010 23:22I don't know if I can sit there and go "lol"; I don't want people thinking I cheat.

Clearly Renegade is the wrong game for you then. This game requires the player to have a functioning pair of balls. Try playing The Sims or something. That doesn't make any sense.

Saying "lol" is like you acknowledging them saying you cheat and being to afraid to confront them.

No. That's not giving a flying fuck what others think.
...and how exactly does that give you "a functioning pair of balls?"

It's ignoring the problem and running away from confrontation.

The basic ideal response you should give is something like this:
"Believe what you want to believe, I really don't care. All I know is I'm not a cheater and that is all that matters."

Simply saying "lol" just makes you look like a loserfag.

Alternatively, I find it funny to play dumb.

Like, if someone accuses you of using an aimbot, you be like "WTF is an aimbot?"

Because people who don't have balls are women, and women get all emotional and try to form a positive social environment in such a situation.

The OP basically did this:

"Oh? What? You think I cheat! No! I don't! I really don't! I'm willing to sit here and discuss this with you for as long as it takes until you believe otherwise! I'll even avoid killing you and stop getting headshots if you'll just believe me!"

Pussy shit. This "believe what you want to believe" garbage is no better. It still stinks of politeness, political correctness, and caring about your accuser's emotional state.
