I completely agree with this statement, unless it's for some special occasion(Halloween as one prime example), it's really a safety issue for anyone else around them, because ANYONE could be hiding under any outfit that makes them unidentifiable.

It could be allowed in homes or religious places, but otherwise it could be a potential problem.

So what your saying i could be arrested in the future for wearing a purple Teletubbies suit?

With some common sense applied, someone in a fancy dress costume walking down a street is probably not planning to attack somewhere.

Someone concealing their identity in an airport, however...

Why not? I guess it's easy enough to get a huge mascot uniform and fill it up with explosives.

Walk to a busy street and do boom!

So with common sense applied, the lawl counts for everyone.
