Hmm? What's funny? That I trust my family members not to be morons? I was that young not too long ago, and I remember the stupid things I did (and the people I did them with) with clarity. I turned out okay. As long as she's safe enough to prevent any permanent consequences, what she does is nobody else's business.

Goztow wrote on Fri, 30 July 2010 03:18I think what Snipr did was pretty damn logical. Don't forget his sister was clearly trying to avoid anyone knowing about it. I agree that it's better she gets experience at a decent place rather than in the bushes but then you first get approval from the parents as it's still their house you live in. And you make sure the guy is at least half serious...

Of course she was trying to avoid anyone knowing about it. It's nobody else's business. I'd be more worried if she said "Don't mind us, we're just furiously humping over here". Where's the logic in what he did? He hasn't stopped his sister from doing anything. All he's done is piss people off. What logic can there possibly be in not even accomplishing your goals? Making sure the guy is serious or the place is appropriate is her call to make, not his. I'm all for being old fashioned, but I think other people deciding when and where you can have sex is crossing the line.

Goztow wrote on Fri, 30 July 2010 03:18So either he ignored it, which seems wrong in my eyes; or he just told his parents, which is even worse in my eyes as it's up to her to take that way; or he did what he did. Sure it's not a good solution but I don't see any other one, really...

Solution? Where's the problem? Snpr isn't involved at all. He just happened to place himself in a situation that wasn't asking for his input.

Get her out to talk in private, then what? Get her to kick him out instead? How's that less alienating?

If it's really bothering him that much, talk it out. He's overstepping any time he forces an action out of her, though.

Have a talk with your sister, explain her what I explained and ask how she would have reacted if she were in your shoes... she might come to thank you .

You underestimate my sister.
