FUD, you may use it with new critical hardware. (in the past there have been cases where a PSU power cable was labeled critical hardware, and thus allowed you to buy a OEM Windows version) OEM does limit your rights on support from MS. You'll of course get the Windows Updates, but for actual support (phone/e-mail) you should talk to the builder of your PC (you in this case).

I never get tech support from Microsoft, I always fix stuff myself. In my case I am just scared that when I replace a hardware piece that maybe one will break, and they tell me I have to re buy it.
