

---

Subject: Re: don't ask don't tell

Posted by reborn on Thu, 13 Jan 2011 11:54:09 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Spoony wrote on Thu, 13 January 2011 05:30
you're still talking about the guy with two kids here?

Sorry, no. I was talking about Carrier.

Spoony wrote on Thu, 13 January 2011 05:30
are you even reading this thread? didn't you see the part where i pointed out that what supposedly saved his life was a hell of a lot stronger than he's been conned into thinking it was?

Yes I did read the thread. I saw you point it out, but you are assuming that it was based on fact. I'm sure many people care for Carrier, but suppose they didn't? Suppose people do not really care about him one way or the other... Faith in the belief that they do kept him from committing suicide.

It wasn't faith in Jesus, it was faith in the belief that people cared for him. All the same, it was still faith.

Spoony wrote on Thu, 13 January 2011 05:30
It's poorly phrased.

Really? I thought you held religion in the same contempt as drugs. If not worse?

Spoony wrote on Thu, 13 January 2011 05:30
In your new thread you suggested that if there's no God then there's no meaning to life and it's all a waste of time.

If anything on this forum would be a dangerous idea to plant in the head of the guy with two children, it'd be that.

Yeah, you're right. I am routing for you in the other thread though. I know you'll come through, I have faith in it .

Spoony wrote on Thu, 13 January 2011 05:30
now you're rambling.

Me, ramble? Never! I do think you (and I mean you as in everyone, not you specifically) need to be careful in life when you challenge peoples core beliefs. Some people are more fragile than you realise.

---