I always find that battlefield seem to do what call of duty did already.

Not sure if that's true. Battlefield 1942 came out a year before the first Call of Duty, and most of the BF games since then have been an improvement on the original concept. Battlefield 2 for example came out 2 years before Modern Warfare 1, so if anything, CoD's recent "modern" games might be following Battlefield 2's popularity.

But whether or not one "copied" the other, the two games are very different. Battlefield has things like transport vehicles, tanks, helicopters, a Commander, artillery strikes, and sometimes jets. I personally prefer that larger scale battle over MW2 and Black Ops' infantry frag fest. I personally think BF3 will kick the crap out of the next Call of Duty game, but we'll see I guess. There's still a lot left to see for both games.
