I think it was in 2008 that I was given the function of global moderator on these forums. Looking back, it has been quite a blast. I like to believe I managed to make a small difference for Renforums during this time, at least I do hope so. Was it worth it? Meh, better not ask the question . I like to believe everything's worth doing if you do it with your heart. And I tried to take care of renforums with my heart.

I'm visiting the forums less and less, from 10s of times per day before, down to a couple of times per week now. I completely stopped playing Renegade, the interest is gone as the friends I used to play with moved on (and so did I).

I'm rather a perfectionist: if I do something, I want to do it fully and I don't have the impression that I'm capable of doing this "job" fully any longer. Therefor I decided to give my function back to Crimson.

I'll stick around here, of course, so this does not really change much. Well, except that someone else will do the "dirty job" now, I guess.
