Typically you would compare the types of packets being sent to the IP from what it normally gets....which should be easy since it's a xwis server. If the packets do not fit the criteria, you block them at the router level.

I'm not sure why it would take all year? Surely you haven't tried to block 100k ip's 1 by 1?

The problem is that a lot of these budget providers that xwis is using wont do this for them.
