Which, in most cases, is OK because you were expecting the UAC popup as a result of what you did. The whole point is that if it pops up when you're NOT expecting it to (ie: for Java to do nag you about it's goddamned updates AGAIN!) then you take more time to read what it is that's asking for permission to run.

I've never turned UAC off since the day I installed Vista (which was the day it went RTM), it's not really an annoyance, just an extra safety net to guard against rogue programs.

Therefore i cba with its shitty notifications every 2 seconds

I get maybe 3 or 4 a day. If you're seeing them every two seconds there is something seriously wrong with your PC.
