Trojan wrote on Thu, 30 April 2015 02:54 Just for the record, my incompetence as a leader has sure killed Rencorner: almost at 2000 registered members and we have multiple successful servers in several different games. My failure as a leader has also lead to our paypal account having enough money to pay all our server bills for 3 years. That is unless I decide to spend it on drugs. Only time will tell.

If there is one thing I can comfortably say, it's congratulations and hopefully you continue to let the name live on. You definitely beat my expectations.

But let's get the record absolutely straight, and assign credit where its' due. The main consistently-online userbase, was brought together and was made whole under my leadership. I created the foundation that made your success possible as I did what was necessary to start up a community that would be successful in just a short few months based entirely around a game over a decade old. No easy feat.

When you took over RC, we were already over half the registered users you currently have, which was accomplished in a 1/3rd of the time under my leadership. The Renegade server seems to be a wasteland compared to where it was, and Renegade-X benefited other communities.

The Minecraft server, although I haven't looked at any statistics or went playing through it myself - seems to be well managed. Multiple game modes and options, cool. But the only other game even worth mentioning that you host is Killing Floor, and while the server has traffic itself, it never seemed to bring in traffic to the wider community side of things.

Since that PayPal jab was probably made at me, i'll remind you I was 12 when I first started up RC, it was more popular than it is today. I wasn't born into a rich family either, servers were a lot more expensive back then (the performance abysmal for the money), and somehow I still made it work. These days I don't have a dollar on PayPal, and I still smoke the finest herb this side of North America has to offer. I'm alive and well, and I've never had to suck dick to make ends meet and pay for my infamous "drug [weed] addiction"..
