I'd estimate that the average Renegade population today is about half of what it was around the game's release. As a shred of evidence, while today there are about 22,000 people listed on Renegade's ladder, back in my ladder-whore days of the first couple months of the game's release, I remember there being about 45,000 players listed in the ladder rankings

Now, when taking into account that this game, which was produced 1-and-a-half years ago by a company that doesn't even exist anymore, was considered a marketing failure, I'd say that this game is far from dying, even if I myself don't play it much anymore.

From what I've seen, it seems that most people who think Renegade is dead or is dying have recently quit playing Renegade themselves. Those people, being as near-sighted and self-centered as they are, cast false judgement on the game and condemn it to the graveyard.
