Well, now I have a few things to say but I didn't feel like going quote happy, so I'll just do it like this.

1. To whoever said ETM was after Reloaded: It wasn't, the game and the movie coincided. IE - In the game, you blow up the power plant. In the movie, you see the power plant blown up. Part of the game may have gone slightly past where the movie ended though, I don't recall. I do agree that the oracle is back in her apartment, though.

2. To whoever said Reloaded was pointless: Erm...How? It's the same thing that happens with all contiguous trilogies (Star Wars for example). The first movie is released and it introduces the characters and gives the a minor conflict to resolve. The larger conflict, however, is unresolved and this is solved in the final two movies assuming the first one does well in the box office. Reloaded is just leading to Revolutions. I think a lot of people felt it wasn't a good movie because it left a lot of questions unanswered, but that's because they have to answer those questions in Revolutions.
