Well, considering that this community is like a second family to him. I'm sure it is to many people in here, including me.

When I'm pissed off at the world, I can always count on this community to cheer me up and liven my spirits. Aprime tried to please everybody by hosting a MMN, but wasn't able to, and therefore felt like he let down a very large amount of people important to him.

This community can be considered a second life to many other people, because in here you can get respect based on manners, not like in real life where manners mean jack shit and there are many social statuses which degrade people.

Believe it or not, an internet community has a large effect on someone. Even though we may have not met each other in person, we respect each other and are technically very good friends.
