Subjective morality has nothing to do with it. There's nothing you can do about what others feel.

Lets just push morality to the side for a moment.

It may be ok in the eyes of individuals to hate certain people. Doesn't matter if some people are the world's biggest racists. But if they go out and kill those people like the KKK have done in the past, then thats certainly not OK.

It is OK to hate gays if you keep it to yourself, but if you openly say you hate them, or if you kill them, harass them or discrimitate them, then thats immoral and that is not OK.

As for being gay...If you are gay its because you are BORN that way or you grow up that way (and i don't mean social interference). They can't avoid it, so it's not their fault. It's not wrong. It is pretty illogical to say otherwise. And NO i do not read the bible, and if the bible says that "it was not god's intent" for people to be that way, well it was not "god's intent" for people to have 6 toes, or hair covering their face, or to have no hands and legs, be 2-foot tall... but guess what. It happens.

Quote:You can obviously CHOOSE to be gay or not.

Can you? I don't remember that part when I was due to arrive. :rolleyes:

And let the KKK adopt a highway. They are not hurting anyone.
