Quoting religious texts is not a way to prove a point, since not everyone follows the same religion. What seems "right" to one person might be "wrong" to another, and vice versa. Get it? Who are you to judge someone based on your standards of what they should or should not be doing?

Here's my take on it: Don't try to force your beliefs on someone else- THAT is what is truly wrong. So long as they don't try to make you do things their way, why should you go out of your way to disrupt their happy lives?
