DragonFgLook, unless you're just a complete retard then you actually choose whether you have sex with a guy or a girl. It's no different than choosing to having sex or not to have sex. I don't have a degree in biology so I can't say whether you are more unclined to have sex with a man or a woman. But the fact is you CHOOSE to have sex, whether it be with a man or a woman. Maybe I'll go into how I think it's wrong later.

The act of having sex is not what makes one gay. Being attracted to the same sex is. Look, I will explain this once and not again. If sexuality is, as you say, a choice, then you have the option of having sex with either men or women. You, being straight, want to have sex with women, obviously. You can't understand why a man would want to have sex with another man. OK, fair enough. So then you're assuming that everyone is like you, but some guys just want to do something disgusting and have sex with other guys? But that makes no sense. If everyone felt the way you do, there would be no gays. So, obviously, there is something deeper here. Gay people must be gasp ATTRACTED TO THE SAME SEX. This is not something that is chosen consciously, since one can't just say "I'm straight/gay now!" See? Someone like yourself would never just say, "I'm going to go have dirty sex with a bunch of guys." Gay people are different.
