Quote:Most of those are interpreted so vaguely that it's impossible for them not to come true one way or another.

Maybe so, but i still think the restoration of the old Roman Empire is becoming real with the European Alliance. It is almost fully covered with the euro system. (Which is also prophiced.) Anyway beyond that.

Quote:Does god love me, and does he care. Yesterday I watched my dog die. He was old and loved and that morning his heart failed. His name was max and he was a 10 year old Belgium friend. For 3 hours he gasped for one last breath, all I could do was hold him and hope that he this dumb dog affected me more then any other. I think it was because I know I will be going the same way. The doctors never told me I would end up lieing in some bed gasping. And when it is my time to go, because we all came here with our return tickets punched, will god be merciful and let me go in peace. Who knows, I guess ill find out latter.

You may no tbe saying this but i really hate it when people who "don't believe in God". Then they go and blame God when something is wrong. Really bugs me.

Quote:What really bugs me is what actually happens when someone dies. All your thoughts and inner workings of oyour brain are controlled by electricity in it, but when you die, where does this energy go?

Yet there have been people have had "near death" experiences, and they say their "soul" or "conciuousness" was no longer part of their body, they were looking down on themselves. I wonder if there's any connection....

People also try to connect this with astral-projection. If astral-projection is real, supposively we can see our dead relatives. That's actually kinda freaky in my opinion.
