There are many theories on what life really is. For example, we are able to think logically and consciously. What exactly enables us to do this? Everything in our bodies is controlled by our brain, which is nothing but an organ that transmits electrical impulses to our nerves. How do we store memories? How are we able to reason?

These are very intriguing questions.

Also, I believe that there is a possibility that a celestial being might exist. While it is impossible to tell how our God looks like, or what he can and can't tolerate, we set our own standards on what can be morally right. The Bible, Torah, and Koran are not definite proof that a god exists up there; it is but a bunch of stories that have morals which can be applied to us to make our lives better.

Everything is a theory; God, evolution, plate tectonics, how the universe came to be. We just are not sure, and perhaps that is what makes us unique.
