NeoSaber

eggmacThere is no good and evil.

To believe that is the one the biggest mistakes a person can make.

You see, you would say that Bush is good and Saddam is evil. An Iraqi would say that Saddam is good and Bush is evil. A Chinese Man would say bot hare evil. You get the idea...

I do not trust in any media, especially in war times. And I do not trust the authority, because it has deceived the people ever since. To put it at its simplest.

But I think this whole debate becomes useless. we all have presented our postitions on this very difficult issue and noone will be able to convince the other one. Still, I think I got some insight into the 'American' view on this issue, which I could not do before. So there is some profit in this discussion, but I don't think it is much use to go on with it...

Oh and btw:

Quote:I highly doubt he has noble ambitions.

Very true! This is what I am talking about! You, Kirby, obviously DO have a critical view on particular things, especially because it is your 'political opponent'. Hence you do not believe every single word they say and you DO question their motives. What I say is that one has to do that with every political party, regardless wheteher you support them or not. There is no need for opportunistic obligation to a particular authority.
