Subject: Which is better?

Case in point... my box at work, I kept Windows XP up for 8 weeks straight and only had to reboot because I accidentally unplugged the PS/2 mouse and it wouldn't work. The USB is broken on the board for some reason.

And yet I install Fedora on it and I can't keep it online for more than a week without something going whack.

But overall, Linux is awesome for servers and stable as hell. The n00bstories box has 149 days uptime and that's online because they had to power it down to change the UPS it was plugged into. But for a workstation, I don't really like it. I find XP to be quite stable, and if you keep up with the patches it's pretty secure.
