If both of the moron politicians would spend less money on ads bashing the other and more on building up credentials for themselves...

Kerry changes his mind too damn often to be a reliable choice. Bush may not be the best president ever, but at least you know where you stand with him. And given the rather hectic nature of world events during his presidency, I think he's doing better than could be expected.

Note that I think most politicians on the political scene now are piles of shit who are interested more in themselves than in the country...the people who need to be in office are the people who don't want to be there.[/disclaimer]
