

---

Subject: Ladies and Gentlemen We Have Gas!

Posted by SuperFlyingEngi on Tue, 18 May 2004 19:48:42 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

hydra: A year after Saddam's regime was toppled, a canister of Sarin gas could come from any neighbouring country.

K9: I'm interested as in how Sarin needs to be fired from a gun to mix itself properly. Could you clue me in, since you so obviously researched the topic?

hydra again: Iraq is not a walled off country now. A soda can's worth of nerve agent does not mean that it's obvious Saddam had WMD stockpiles. And a shell with traces of mustard gas could come from anywhere, as well. It would be a little more telling if these had been discovered maybe a year ago and in slightly larger quantities. It barely means anything now. If we had found a room underground stocked with many gallons of nerve agents and other WMDs, those probably would have come from Saddam's regime. But anyone can put a chemical in a soda can and walk across a border.

---