npsmith82One thing that really didn't need to be in the film were those russian wolves. I'm in the understanding that they were either a pointless stab at adding more CGI into the film or they wanted to add how it would indirectly effect animals/nature. They could've at least made them run more realistically. The attack dogs from Red Alert ran better ffs.

Lol, so true.

By the way, if you stay after the credits you'll be able to tell on what book the movie was based on, so if you're a reader, or like to spend some of your free time reading a book like I do, you can try to find it and buy it.
