Aright, I'll get back to the other stuff in a week or so after school gets out and I have time to do things, but first, hydra:

It's not just that some people think it's silly to write books full of President Bush mispronouncing things. The case may be that he is dyslexic. During the 9/11 attack, when Bush was at the school reading books to children, and was informed that the towers were being hit by planes, he just sits there reading the book for another 7 minutes. Behavioral psychologists look at this [which is on tape and will be in Fahrenheit 9/11, I believe] and say, "Oh my god, this is what we teach dyslexic children to do when they are reading." Another instance is when he was asked by some reporters what his first book was, and he said some random kid title like "Run dog run" or something, and ok. But as we look back, "Run dog run" [or whatever the hell it was called] was first published when he was 19.

And on flip-flopping issues: Like what? Please name some so I can get back to those.
