It may be our "duty" to vote, but I for one am choosing to wave that right. The Liberals in the midst of the scandal, and seeing how much of potentially my own money went to pay off their debts doesn't leave me with much confidence in them -- and nor does Paul Martin. He tied the noose around his head when he said he had nothing to do with it. It says that as a finance minister, he didn't know where hundreds of millions of dollars were, so how do I know he won't do that again as the Prime Minister now?

As for the Tories... heh. I dislike them even more than I do the liberals. I don't care much for compulsive liars as much as the next guy, but those children have a track record a mile long. And you KNOW they're just itching at their almost secured glory that comes with the Liberal scandal.

NDP... lol. Warranto said it best.

As for the countless other "little" parties, they mostly lack discipline.
