JavaxcxTo date, Iraq does not have WMD. No WMDs have been found, and no amount of whining over materials that could POTENTIALLY make one will change that.

Remember, if I had potassium and I had nitrate, that doesn't mean I'll make gunpowder. Having metal doesn't mean you're going to make bombs. If that were true, then I'll tell your country that your computer has the potential to be made into a weapon of mass destruction.

You just don't get it...

I am not Saddam and neither are you.

But Saddam has used them in the past, he has made them, and according to human nature he will do it again.

Just like people that do drugs. They do drugs go to jail, they get out and 3 weeks later they are back in jail for doing the same dumb shit.

Like I said in my last post. I would not trust Saddam with a butter knife.

And with you giving Saddam the benefit of the doubt.....that is one of the most stupid things in the world.

It is like trusting Michael Jackson with a group of 8 year old boys.

You are not going to get the expected results.

Saddam is not the type of person who should be allowed to run a country.

oh, and just because we have not found a cure for cancer does not mean there isn't one.
