Because we haven't tried to resolve the issues of France with diplomacy yet. Saddam had 12 years.

I do not agree with the humanitarian reasons. That was a side benefit, but not the main goal. The Middle East fosters terrorism and those born there are taught to hate Americans. Iraq is a key player in the Middle East theater and therefore is a starting point for rebuilding them into the type of people who exist in the 21st century -- people who solve problems with words, deals, and diplomacy, not death and destruction.

Liberating the Iraqis was something we knew we'd obviously accomplish but it wasn't the main focus.

Overall, I'd say that since we haven't had an attack on US mainland soil that Bush is doing the right thing and he's doing a good job.
