SuperFlyingEngiYou'd still live in poverty. What I'm suggesting is that any American citizen who needs medical attention should be able to get it. I don't necessarily agree with those other things you listed.

What you're suggesting is another government bureaucracy, which isn't the solution to poor people having no health insurance. Where in the Constitution does it say a person has a right to healthcare? Where does it say the government should provide healthcare for its citizens? It's not the government's place to give out free money for medical care. There are plenty of private organizations to do it for them. You ask where should a poor person turn to for help with medical coverage. They should look to either providing it for themselves or for help from close friends and family. If those prove absolutely impossible, they should look to the local church or other private charities for financial help. Never should they look to the government for help. It's not its place.
