
Subject: Should we fix jumping on barracks on Canyon?
Posted by Aircraftkiller on Fri, 02 Jul 2004 17:54:18 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Quote:If you DON'T give credit to someone for something they've done for/to you, you're not respecting that person or their work because you're effectively taking it and showing it off as your own.

No, if you don't give them credit, you're being a thief.

Quote:If you DO give credit where due, you're showing that "this person did this work; contributed this idea; whatever." This is a conscious decision, "Do I give him credit, or do I not?" You ARE respecting the individual's work, because you are saying "I didn't make this, but this person did. Here is his name".

That isn't respect.

Quote:Growing up in a Military setting, I'd think you of all people would know you don't have to like someone to respect them; but giving credit where credit is due is respectful.

More like required, not respectful.
