You would find these every so often in Red Alert, Oil Pumps which... You guessed it, pump oil.

Most of them were civilian owned in the war, and became garrisoned for wartime purposes by the two armies. Often times, explosive Barrels are found nearby.

It's based of real life oil pumps and the Red Alert one. Gernader8 will also have his own version of the pump which will make both pumps complement each other in-game.

Model and texture were both done by myself. Expect to find them in single player missions, assault levels, and other assorted goodies.

Concrete texture will be swapped out for a different one, with more contrast.

That looks O.K, but what was their real purpose in RA1? Were they there just for fun?

Remember, it's "by me," not "by myself"

Actually, I don't think it is.

Well then, you'd be wrong also

"myself" shouldn't be used as an elegant replacement for "me" in a sentence; It's only used when there is a reference back to a personal pronoun appearing previously in the sentence, such as "I will texture the oil pump myself."

"Texture" is a noun, not a verb.

That's odd.. the dictionary shows it as a transient verb also.. Oh wait.. you must be wrong too!
