Let us just say that you have a burned CD. This CD has a game on it. When you insert the CD into one computer, the autorun will start. This is normal so far but...

When you insert that same CD into another computer, it will show that the CD has music files, and absolutely nothing else on it.

Sounds like weird riddle, well it is weird, but it is not really a riddle, because this really happened to me . Question: WTF is going on? Is this a punishment from god nero imaging of the cd-rw cd's is crap. I think you have InCD (comes with nero, it's something that makes ur cd-rw's into drive like things). What this does is it needs to format ur disk to it's own (stupid) format. If you burn something onto it normally, stupid nero doesn't recognise it's own format so it burnes a new session using normal format after the InCD formatted part...

i'm sure it's a session problem...

To Fix: (CD-RW)

format disk and burn again

give ur friend a copy of ur nero and get him/her to install the InCD add-on What if the problem is with CD-R? Then I guess it probably can't be fixed...

Anyway, would it be possible to somehow find the game files on CD using nero, or easy CD creator, or by any other means, and install it?

Just close the session and it will be fine.
