Arnold is actually doing a really good job as governor of California, regardless of his being a Republican. I'd definitely vote for Arnold over Bush, and I would have to look more closely at his record and ideas to make a decision whether or not he would be a better President than Kerry.

You weren't looking for quality when you picked Kerry, why start now?

Wasn't looking for quality... blah blah blah.

Kerry's been in the Senate for a long time and, as such, has built up a pretty substantial voting record. And it's not the most liberal in history. When Tim Russert asked Ted Kennedy on Meet the Press whether John Kerry was more liberal than he was, he had this to say:

"Senator Kerry is more liberal than me in the same way that President Bush is a compassionate conservative."

If I wasn't looking for quality, I must have overlooked his war record. Apparently, he won the Silver Star and the Bronze Star, both important medals of valor in combat, I believe. Toss a couple purple hearts in, the fact that he still has shrapnel lodged in him, his distinction in leadership, and the fact that he killed 20 enemy soldiers in Vietnam shows a bit of quality right there. At least more than you can say for President Bush getting in to the National Guard to avoid the draft because his daddy was big and important.

And then, John Kerry can formulate complete, grammatically correct sentences without long pauses. Unlike President Bush.

Let's just forget how he put in for the Purple Heart for a splinter and left after 4 months while other real soldiers turned down multiple PHes to stay and fight.

So there goes his "War Hero" status.

Substantial voting record? John F. Kerry missed 72% of 119 recorded votes held in 2003 on issues President Bush had taken a position on according to Congressional Quarterly. Kerry's fellow Massachusetts senator Ted Kennedy missed just 3% of these votes. Kerry and Kennedy voted the same way 100% of the time on "key votes" in 1986 through 1989, 1992, 1993, 1998, 1999 and 2001.

Well, seeing as I have a chest full of medals myself from 6 years active duty, have lost an appendage in active service and I didn't come home and backstab my fellow sailors by protesting them, I guess I am a better candidate than this self promoting, milk fed moron.

He put himself in for those medals, jackass.

At least he went off to war. I don't particularly like Kerry, or his counterpart, but I'm not going to let a technicality like a blotch on his record deter him from presidency.

It's irrelevant to bring up a detention you had in highschool when you're running of mayor of your city, just as it's irrelevant to bring up one (possibly more) instances of cowardice. His war record has nothing to do with his presidency, regardless of his campaigning tactics.

Yes, but Kerry wants to shove this bogus "War Hero" status down our throats. We wouldn't care if he wouldn't keep mentioning it.

NodbuggerHow you use his WAR record as a positive when you are against WAR?

It can be very useful. Kerry can claim that he knows the harsh and grim reality of war, specifically of a controversial foreign war.

Well his records. not that he actually went. Because there are people that went to Vietnam and said they had fun

He uses his kills and medals and stuff,

Why is Kerry better than Bush? Can you tell me what he stands for because he hasn't even said that yet.

The only thing he has said is that he wants to better America. And well that is very vague.

In terms of issue stances, I side more with Kerry.

However, Kerry does not seem to me the type of strong leader we need. I will admit that President Bush keeps a clear view in mind of what needs to be done and follows through on his actions.

NodbuggerAnd my I ask what part you lost? Nothing big I hope.

My thumb was severed and shattered into three pieces, and my knee dislocated.

Naval doctors reconstructed and re-attached the thumb, but the knee is forever junk. Not too much you can do with them once the cartilage has been ruined, and the meniscus torn.

He also wants to beat in our heads that he is a Vietnam War Veteran... He acts like he is soooo proud of it, yet he has said in the past that he was ashamed to be one.

Anyone ever notice that you can not find a single story about Kerry in the news where it doesn't say anything about being a Vietnam Veteran?

Who: George W. Bush

Why: He does what he says he'll do; his economic plan brought the United States out of the Clinton recession; he has confronted the most important issue of our time with a strong resolve to destroy Islamic terrorism.

There is plenty on which I would disagree with President Bush, but have you seen the alternative? You know what Bush will do; you have no idea what the hell Kerry is gonna do.
