Hey gang-

Forgive me as I don't frequent your forum and it may have already been mentioned...but I would like all of you to write this company expressing your interest in a possible Renegade re-development.

<http://www.petroglyphgames.com/index.html>

Below is a paste of the 1st e-letter I sent them:

Mr. Kroegel,

Congratulations on your new enterprise & I wish you all the best. I would like to ask that you consider a sequel to C&C Renegade Multiplayer. I feel that the original Renegade was denied the recognition it deserved and the multiplayer's basic premise represents a real diamond in the ruff. Re-development with an updated game engine, improved graphics etc. along with a strong primary promotion to the multiplayer crowd would be profound.

You name 'em & I've tried 'em only to return to my favorite. All the other leading multiplayers lack the engaging and ever changing strategies inherent to Renegade.

I think that your company is poised to capture a very large group of players who are looking for something more than the current mindless CTF/DM multiplayers available. I'm confident that the investment would pay off greatly!

Please reply with your expectations as I have many ideas to offer.

Respectfully submitted,

Dr. P. a.k.a. SickO
Augusta, Georgia

We everybody (at least the most people) already know about Petroglyph, and although there are a lot of rumors in the world, it's 99% sure there next game will be a RTS and it will not be a C&C.

I warn you there is a big chance you will get flamed, or ridiculed, since these kind of post appear once in a month, or less. And sometimes people just like to make fun of these since they just feel like it.

Sorry to let you down, but EA still owns the Command & Conquer franchise. This means that petroglyph, as much as most of us would like them to, cannot make another Command & Conquer game. Renalert is the closest you will get to a 'Improved multiplayer Renegade'. As for petoglyph, I personally believe (and hope) that they are making a Dune game.
