There've been IP gatherers in the chats for a long, long time.

Atleast this bot is advertising cheat prevention.

He's emphasising about all-out.co.uk - it's most likely drkagnt who moderates the all-out game server. Yes people have been using the chats to advertise for quite some time now, but "don't say anything abusive" is hypocritical and should only be used to enforce rules on an actual server. I don't think there ever was an official bot that moderated the chat and it certainly isn't up to a gamer to make it moderated. the renbot that logs everything has probably seen more abuse than a whore on saturday night.

I'm just stating that by RenGuard being advertised like that it makes the program lower than cheats.

No, it doesn't. If it were one of us doing it, maybe... but no anti-cheat program could be lower than cheats.

LOL

The RenGuard team has no control over what other people do on WOL.
They cant disallow that person to run his bot there. Only EA can (for now).

Suppose if i was to run a bot on there advertising your personal website (if u have one) , knowing you cant do anything about it, this will make your website lower than other websites?

Thats just big fat LOL, lol.

Depends on how you look at it. I guess I forgot to take into account the fact that usually people like this cannot be talked to, so I would have to say no.

I will retract my post, but I personally do find it ironic that the same annoying spam can be used for good and bad. Also, I must give him some credit because once you join a chatroom, it only pages you once, and never again when you move rooms.

This could've put a nasty dent in public relations if it were defamatory or misleading. It doesn't look all that bad to me...but then again, who listens to spam bots anyway?

And the rest of the chat is just hilariously stupid.

Not taking sides, but advertising is lame in a game chat and will invite unwanted attention.

AlkalineNot taking sides, but advertising is lame in a game chat and will invite unwanted attention. BHS didn't authorize it. They can't stop them from advertising. There's really no side to take.
