I'm glad I live in Chicago lol... the only way we could get a hurricane is if it came up the St. Lawrence Seaway lol.

Then the scenario would be like The Perfect Storm. That COULD happen if the cold front suddenly pushes Tropical Storm Bonnie downwards to meet up with Charley.

Anyway, Charley is expected to hit the East Coast, but even so, it's a damn big hurricane, so I'm guessing we're going to see at least 4 inches of rain in the weekend.

I go to Orlando every year and have been in some bad storms down there. It is not fun. I was in a Disney Resort Hotel. They are like Michigan storms x10.

I'm riding it out right now. It's a great storm. When the hurricane hits, I'm going to sleep. So if I die, at least I didn't see it coming.

It looks like I dodged the bullet; Charley isn't going to be severely impacting the East Coast, but it seems that Tampa is pretty much fucked.

Plus, we now have to watch Tropical Depression #14 to see if it will become a threat to South Florida.

Hurricanes are fun.

Yeah, and it's the International Day for the Left-Handed, or my dad said. Could also be national, I forgot.

Anyway, I don't think Holland has ever been hit by a hurricane in recent history. We don't get earthquakes or volcanos around here either. It's pretty dull here actually

I, too, am glad I live in Chicago. The closest we get to hurricanes is the huge amount of hot air coming out of Mayor Dailey's mouth, or however you spell his name.

How did you do? I stood outside for a good half of the storm, then lost power to about 5 days. Orlando has alot of cleaning up to do.
