Yeah, this sucks... I live a little north of Orlando in central Florida, we already took a direct hit from Charlie, and then Frances. It looks like we'll get most of the east side of the hurricane, if it shifts any more to the right it'll be a direct hit. It'll be about 120mph or something like that when it reaches us (Hopefully it doesn't stay at a category 5 when it makes landfall.), Charlie was about 90mph, and Frances was about 70mph when it got here.

Oh, damn! I really respected you too. :rolleyes:

You don't know the whole story, so don't even talk. This is something that happened on IRC. You have no part in it, so just quit your bullshit, sit down, and shut the fuck up.

I don't feel the need to elaborate, but since you are such a dumbfuck, I'll explain it anyways. You see, things can be offensive, whether or not they're meant to be. Like I said, it's just like blacks saying the "n" word versus whites. Blacks (african-americans/color people) have a history of that word and can be very disrespectful if it's said at them from somebody outside their little circle or race. Same is with religion. Even though someone may mean that as a light-hearted joke, the fact that they're not religious makes it seem to be offensive. Since I am religious, people know when I say that it's a light-hearted joke, but if someone else was to say it, I may be offended.

Again, this was something that was in IRC and it wasn't even exactly like this situation.

Call it a double-standard or whatever you wish, but that's the way the world works. Unfair? Too bad.

Wow, now I see where you're coming from. You see, I have some friends who are religious and I'm sure they could take your explanation as an example. So next time they head off to Bible study, since they are in fact religious, nobody would have a problem with them saying "God hates Florida!"

Oh, and there's no way you can be seriously religious, seeing as you throw out the insults faster than God can forgive them. Where's your sense of humility? Don't you learn of the virtues of forgiveness and understanding in the sermons?

Oh, and I was a Catholic for 10 years, until recent happenings in society prompted me to leave. So I think I have some credibility in what I am saying. Never during my experience with Catholicism did I find that being Catholic gave me some unrestricted ability to insult Catholicism or its God without having other Catholics (and non-Catholics) condemn me for doing it.

Your little theory that religious insults and remarks are okay as long as you're a part of that religion are the same as racist insults and remarks being okay as long as you're a member of that race has no real basis other than what the corruption in your mind has led you to somehow believe.

Of course, if they just go to a bible study and say "God Hates Florida" without giving/showing any reasoning for it then you'd have a point. It was obvious that I was joking. Seeing as how nature is controlled by God and this many hurricanes hammering Florida in this short amount of time it makes for a light-hearted joke. Plus, I never said that NOBODY would be offended. It's known that quite a few african-americans don't like the "n" word period. Whether or not it's light-hearted.

I have some things to work on as a Christian. I'm never going to perfect, so why should I try and attempt to act as if I was such?

Edit: I too was Catholic, but the Catholic faith is so messed up. I was Catholic for about 10 years before leaving the Catholic faith and becoming Protestant. I preach against the Catholic church and will always disagree with most of their views.

You're right that administrators can impose any kind of restrictions that they want, but that being said internet forums are rarely holy ground. Personally I don't care if I offend you with a joke I make, as a matter of fact that would make it more enjoyable. I fucking hate hypocrites who are so afraid of being offended, yet they hide behind their race/religion to say whatever the hell they want.

Here's a few jokes:

How do you start a war in Israel? Roll a quater down the street.

What do you call two Mexicans playing basketball? Juan on Juan.

I'm not Jewish or Mexican, so by your standards I shouldn't be allowed to say that. Well fuck your politically correct standards, I'll say whatever the fuck I want if I think it's funny or worth saying. I hate all this bullshit surrounding our society. Holy shit! Respect for what? It's almost as if you expect others to show your religion more respect than you do. I think it's stupid that people choose to be offended by simple words or jokes. It's as if society is so damn boring and peoples lives have so little strife that they need to create problems for themselves. I also would not use excessive language in a workplace environment, not because I'm afraid of offending someone but because it's simply unprofessional. The same way I wouldn't call my boss "dude" or "bro" as I do with my friends.

I am a Christian, a friend of mine is a jew and another is Chinese. We insult the hell out of each other constantly based entirely around ethnic and religious stereotypes. We don't get uptight and offended, that would be ridiculous. I find it completely uncomprehensible how anyone could take a comment, no matter what the content, offensive when it is not meant in an insulting manor. If someone walks up to you and actively insults you for your beliefs because of genuine feelings in an attempt to put you down, then by all means get offended. But not because of a joke.

Anyway, whatever. My point is that people shouldn't be so damn uptight about religion, race, or whatever and just let it flow. If someone isn't actively trying to offend you then don't take offense, that's my philosophy.

http://abclocal.go.com/wls/news/strange/091304_ap_sn_hurricane.html

Quote:Hurricane Cures: Coating ocean with olive oil?
September 13, 2004 (JACKSONVILLE, Fla.) — As Hurricane Ivan churns in the Caribbean -- amateur hurricane busters are coming up with some pretty strange ideas on taming giant storms.

One person suggests coating the ocean with olive oil, while another recommends building giant fans along Florida's coast to blow hurricanes in the other direction.

Hugh Willoughby, of the International Hurricane Center at Florida International University, has heard them all. One amateur hurricane buster suggests towing an iceberg to Florida to cool the ocean.

But Willoughby says the most outlandish idea, and one of the most often suggested, is to use a nuclear warhead to blow a hurricane apart. He notes hurricanes are bad enough without being radioactive.

There was this story in the newspaper that said some guy and a team made a special polymer that could absorb some 4,000 times its own weight. He tested it over a thunderstorm just past the coast, and claimed it caused it to dissipate. NOAA says that it would take about 37,000 tons of this polymer dropped over a hurricane every hour and a half to weaken it enough (they said they based their calculations on a previous version of the polymer). When the polymer falls into the ocean it is broken up by the saltwater.
