Are you sure they were all viruses? AV software nails some stuff based on it's behavior, even though it might not be a virus.

Is that the 2004 version? I read a lot of bad reviews on it after I had ordered the (2004) upgrade from 2002, so I got a refund and just renewed my subscription.

PC formatting rule #1:

ALWAYS UNPLUG YOUR NETWORK/INTERNET CABLES UNTIL YOU HAVE ANTIVIRUS AND FIREWALL INSTALLED!

You should also try to get SP1 on a CD and install it before plugging in the cables. Most virii infect your PC during the small period of time between booting up the totally defenseless Windows and installing the protection.

You should get some decent anti-virus, Norton's among the worst out there.

Norton used to be my savior, i loved it, bowed down to it, and trusted it, until i got Nod32, and realised that norton had been letting about 8 virus's run on my computer (daily scans).

Nod32 blocks everything, its fucking great

Ironically, PC Magazine gave NOD32 a bad rating a few months ago. Norton was a good one in their tests.

I dont read pc magazine but I wouldn't be amazed if they gave AOL top ISP of the year award or something stupid like that.

I have Symantec AntiVirus Corporate Edition. No problems here.

Corporate > Norton 2004.

Stick with Norton? Are you fucking insane? Norton's a pile of shit. The only AV utilities worth bothering with are NOD32, Kazpersky, AVG and Symantec.

--antivirus.bat--

@echo off
cls
echo Scanning for viruses on [C:]
echo.
echo.
echo Press a key to commence scan.
pause > nul
cls

echo No viruses found in memory.
echo.
pause

Believe it or not, I have a friend who fell for this.

well, if you like norton hogging about what, 5 or 6 processes on your computer, just so it can autoupdate, check virus', sit in the system tray, and startup, and then... not catch every virus thats out there, NOT block those annoying "you must install this software" virus', as well as not detect virus' in system restore & dllcache directories, then by all means, use Norton.

i was a Norton System Works Corporate Edition user for the last 4 years, dropped it as soon as i found something that detected virus', and also only has ONE lite weight process.

majikentYou do realize Symantec makes Norton, right?

Sigh Yes I do. However Symantec and Norton use completely different scanning engines.
