Google It, or learn yourself. /help is all you need.

Type /help

That's all you need to learn to code. If you get stuck, keep reading it over and always ask a willing coder to help you.

icedog, yeah, i got it back today...crimson had to change my password manually so I could switch it. I never got the emails :\

```
on :TEXT::#channel:{
if ($1 == !op) { mode $chan +o $nick {
}
}
}
```

Type !op to make this do it to you ... or ...

```
on :TEXT::#channel:{
if (blah isin $1-) { msg $chan Blah your self, $nick $+ ! {
}
}
}
```

Should work

What? I just said that /help is all he needs. That's what I'm told when I ask questions...why can't I do the same?

Just because everyone else does it, doesn't mean you need to also.

Just think how you felt when they said, "type /help", instead of an answer to your question.

In most cases, an answer like "Do it yourself" for something quick and easy, such as the code you and Xtrm2Matt posted, is just construed as rude.

But notice his first post:
glyde51:oops:

Where can I get a IRC Bot for my IRC channel that will respond to keywords and such?
He didn't ask for a tutorial or a script itself. He asked where to get an IRC bot. I told him to Google It or make one himself and then told him that /help is all that you need to make one...I don't see how that's rude.

Google matches meta tags and keywords...so you're bound to get "bot" pertaining to actual robots even if you put "irc bot". It's not Google's fault.

Not off the top of my head, but search for WinBot..I guess it's a good bot although I never could get it to work for me. You get the most satisfaction in making one of your own.

*cough*go to irc.digitaldepiction.net for coding help cough

There, happy? IRC bots can be found there. I easily found this site by Google, maybe you should actually learn how to use search egines before you blame it on Google.
