I wonder if my view on getting American troops back to America and sending in the french to eat lead for a few years was considered Kerry or Bush supporting...

Anyway, I agree that there should have had multiple answers to some of the questions.

Pffff, just because everyone on this forum isn't a Kerry supporter like yourself, it doesn't make us polarized, actually... I'd rather say YOU are polarized. =P

Well, damn! That's a pretty polarized answer. I guess I can't disagree with you so much anymore!!

Accept it: you support Bush. This is a sign of your subconscious telling you that you are a Bush-supporter! That voice in your head is right! More importantly, I'M right!

Some people also put commas after incomplete phrases, but that's just me. I'm just saying, look at everyone's answers. It's either 90% or so for Bush or for Kerry. I'm just saying that the two parties really seem to have split everyone down the middle.

At least I'm not one of those idiots who can't capitalize or even attempt to make a complete sentence.

Plus, I'm just saying, Democrats usually go by emotion rather than logic.

Quote:I'm just saying that the two parties really seem to have split everyone down the middle. That's mostly because of the Liberal party spreading hate. If they would just act like normal human beings and stop all of the name calling and lying people would vote more on issues rather than just words. But since the left wingers are so bent on getting in the White House it dosen't look like they're gonna stop anytime soon.

It is entirely the fault of one party that your country is polarized politically.
