This is the Imperial Scout Trooper, a infantry class of the Imperial Navy's ground forces. Our design is based on the unit displayed on Endor in Star Wars Episode VI: Return of the Jedi.

The limbs not covered by armor look like wood painted black. The boots look like they have air bubbles in 'em. It's alright.

He can buy one, as weapons are purchasable.

I think they will look fine when boned. It's because of the stance he is in.

hehe, I don't think I can count the number of times I have heard jokes about boning things in renegade
It was funny when I said to everybody I was boning a snowman for Snowfight

I think the head looks a bit too big. It looks out of proportion. Also the Scout Trooper is supposed to have little packs (like webbing packs) on his sides and a pistol holster (laser pistol style of thing) on his left leg (as you look at him).

That was not included because of the polycount. And no, he does not look out of proportion

Well I've just gone and nicked a scout trooper plastic model off my cousin and I've compared it to the one in your picture. Like I said the head it too big. Not only that but the armour on the arms should be in three bits; sholder, upper arm and forearm, not over the elbow. There shouldn't be any armour on his arse. The knee and shin pads should be separate with a strap around the back of the knee. Just thought you'd want to know.

Actually, the movie's sniper rifle was a spray-painted and modified MG-42, that's why the sniper rifle looks like a MG-42.
"(And yes, weaponry historians, the movie prop for this weapon was a modified MG-42.)" (From the Renegade: A New Hope offical site)
