I'm sorry, but we are nowhere near the best. We have A LOT to learn before we can even be considered to be elite. I doubt we will ever be the best out there, but with time and practice, who knows what the future holds for us.

What the hell is siggys-r-us? I want to see if you even have a shot at taking them down.

Sending you .png will not show you how I do the imaging because I do all the graphic work in photoshop and do the layering in fireworks. So all you will get is the layering.

You wont be able to see how the fancy affects are done because I copy them across as a bitmaps into fireworks.

Hence there would be no point in sending it.

If you really want to know how to do this abstract stuff go to <http://www.good-tutorials.com> I learnt practically all I know from that site.

Try it.

For a simple example now, pick a linear gradient, any 2 (or more) colours, set the blend mode to difference and go crazy applying gradients then apply a good filter (distorting is good with this).

Open the channels window (ya know, the channels tab on the bottom right), and make sure the green channel is visible. I copied and pasted part of the gray dragon into a new image, and unchecked green, and it turned purple, so maybe that's it.

(Also, why do you have "only web colors" checked? I think it's better without that.)

Dictionary.com definition of "painting":

The process, art, or occupation of coating surfaces with paint for a utilitarian or artistic effect.

They aren't computer "paintings". They are computerised graphic art.

It's OK man - You just got a little pesticide in yur weed dood - Burn sum clean green & then it'll look grey again man...
Actually - don't adjust your settings - the purple - it's just your gayness coming thru - let it come out! J/K man! May seem obvious, but can you simply restore default settings in your editing software?

try finding a few monitor calibration software apps.. and try a few different color profile drivers for windows.. Adobe also has a gamma loader that you "should" run, if you're using Photoshop.. Another issue that could be causing a problem is 32 bit color.. If you pick just the right color, it can look completely different in your image editing program than it does in IE.. and it can look 100 times different on someone elses monitor.

If nothing at all helps, you may have simply come to the end of the life for your monitor.. Is it only purple after it warms up, etc? or right when you turn it on. When you boot windows, is the blackpoint really light and grey, until windows loads its own drivers and splash screen, then it turns darker black?

where might the gamma loader be in adobe?

as far as 32 bit color.. it effects ALL the gray levels.. not just one color and where/what are the windows color profiles?

dont think its the moniter.. just lil over 1.8 years old.. doubt its losing its color like these things only look purple in Photoshop..

if i chose "edit in image ready" it will look normal..
any where else other then photoshop it wont look purple im pretty sure the prob is ONLY in photoshop..

try going in to desktop properties > settings > advanced > color management

You'll probably see the color profile for the monitor listed...change that to "Adobe RGB 1998" and see if it fixes the problem.

I would say that it's definately just a color management problem with your adobe settings, and the color profile driver loaded for your monitor.

msgtpaintry going in to desktop properties > settings > advanced > color management

You'll probably see the color profile for the monitor listed...change that to "Adobe RGB 1998" and see if it fixes the problem.

I would say that it's definitely just a color management problem with your adobe settings, and the color profile driver loaded for your monitor.

perfection!

that did the trick!

didn't see it in the defaults but i add'd it and it worked

gawd u dont know how annoyin that was.. lol id have ppl come over that wanted stuff eddied for them..
and they'd want sum thing gray in the pic..

"like ya it looks purple but really its gray"

when thier payin me.. it was just un-professinol lol

TYVFM!

thier grayish right? lol

j_ball430It's a respect issue. I don't say that your gaming skills are just "point and click skills". Do the same for us. We don't appreciate it being called "computer paintings". SOUNDS REASONABLE.

I would not be offended, technically you would be making fun of yourself as well as you play/played this game.

The point is that you should respect others' abilities.

If I couldn't comprehend anything then how would I be posting right now and using others' previous posts in the reply? Another great comeback by Mr.Bull.
