So i made two models from TD. I know they doesnt look exactly like the orginal ones. They are not for any modification or something else. Only for fun. I think im going to make some more.

I must say that I´m not very good in texturing so don´t look to much at the Textures Polycount is about 2000-3000 would be great if we could use those in place of the current ones we have in renegade

(textured better of course)

Yes, it would be great to see them in a mod.
However Renegade doesn't do justice for these models.

Those are really good, and the textures are decent enough to make you really enjoy the actual detail of the model.

I'd love to see these ingame!

What about Half-Life 2?

If he means Renegade can't handle them, Renegade can surely handle them. I don't know exactly what he's talking about.

I think he was more of imply that he wants them for his commando mod.

I really like the buggy.

If you would like them Setup for gameplay in renegade you can contact me.

I consider them Renegade quality. For Half-Life 2, they need much more polygons to look smoother, such as the wheels and interior.

Thanks for the many comments. I don't think they will fit in Half-life. Maybe Battlefield would be better, because of the large terrain. But theres nothing planed in that direction. I havent't got the time to make so much models. The only time i can model and relax a bit is over the weekends. Next I'm going to make the Nod Light Tank. I post pictures when it's finished and textured. I don't like to show untextured models even if the textures a not very good

You can have large terrain in Half Life 2

And oh make sure the light tank you're modeling is M2A1 Bradley Fighting Vehicle fitted with a 75mm cannon.

Yes, but Battlefiled is desgined for it.

I know. I think Westwood changed some parts, because some things are different from the Bradley m2a1.

The models both look well constructed. Not sure what the acceptable poly count is for vehicles in Renegade, but they both seem kinda high. The texture on both of them is too monochromatic. I think there should be more color variation, maybe add some browns and slight greens to some of the areas to make it more worn, and add depth. Also it seems that while the poly count adds a lot of detail, the texture adds virtually none, especially on the second model of the mobile gun. As much as you said you aren't good at texturing, I would take that advice into account to some extent.

Also, if possible, I would make the camo patches connect on the separate surfaces.

I would add smaller details like bolts and seams, to give them a sense of scale.

Don't be jelouous now that these are way better than your mammoth tank.

Half-Life 2 doesn't have to be designed for it. I can easily make a quick map in Hammer that is really big, has hills, and has a lot of open space. It will run perfectly fine.
