so just for your pleasure :

Titan test animation

Mammoth's test walk

It looks like plastic of course, I did it just to make you say it... :rolleyes:

I like the brushed metal look on the assault rifle.

The map, however, seems a bit too reminiscent of Quake DM maps for my taste.

Love to hate Reborn, I'm sure you meant that.

Commando looks like he's made out of plastic. A usual problem with your work. I don't know WTF those four images are as they have no description whatsoever, but they look bad - textures shouldn't be that obvious in tiling on a wall.

That gun looks like plastic, except for the slightly metallic look on the gray barrel.

I like how you added the Nod logo facing the player on the guns. Just incase we forget what side we're on in the middle of the game and start C4ing the buildings we spawn in.

Kind of says something about the intelligence of Reborn's target player base, doesn't it?

Also, I like how the round case ejection port is on the wrong side of the gun, This must be because all you masocistic Reborn players love being hit in the side of the face by shell casings when you fire your weapons.

Here's the constructive criticism you're looking for:

Those two animations are pretty good, but I'd say the first one looks kind of "floaty", meaning it looks like there isn't much gravity; a common issue many animators have to look out for.

And as for the Mammoth MKII animation, it moves properly and there seems to be a good balance of gravity. However, the legs shouldn't move two at a time, but should move unevenly two at a time. Try watching the cinematic in Tiberian Sun of the Mammoth demolishing a Nod base.

AuroraX0Also, I like how the round case ejection port is on the wrong side of the gun, This must be because all you masocistic Reborn players love being hit in the side of the face by shell casings when you fire your weapons.

Incase you haven't noticed, CSS has those on the wrong side too.

Well, the Cyborg armour could be passed off as an elastomeric polymer coating (has the appearance of plastic), except it looks nothing like it.

And Aurora, perhaps all Nod personnel are left handed?

Overall, I'd have to say I'm impressed with Reborns work. It doesn't suck as much as it has in the past.

The legs should all move at different times. follow along:

If the front left leg lifts first, the back right leg should lift just after it. Then just before the back right leg sets down, the front right leg should lift off first. Then the back left leg should lift just after the front right leg lifted off, and the front left leg should raise before the back left sets down.

There's your proper animation.

Again Aurora CS:S has the port in the face of the player. lol If you want to see it oriented the correct way play AA:O. I haven't seen anyone saying CS:S Sucks because the port on their M4 is on the wrong side, so why should this be such a big flipping deal.

Also I was gonna say just what Icedog posted. Since you have him ignored I think Renardin I'll quote it because its important...

nod logo will be removed from cyborg weapon.

For the animation of the mammoth, it's a test anim, like the titan's one.

Let's see final version of PermaGrin. I will post it when I get it.

Oh and yes : OMG that stuff looks like plastic!

I didn't gave reflection or metal look to the cyborg because it will gets a metal reflection on most part of its body. (so plastic look on purpose, having a textured reflection and one added with some effects would look bad)

Ack, just to help you for the renders (the master of max renders 'news' don't know what's from max, interesting...) :

The renders on 'cybergooch style' are on 3dsmax.
The other pics and the animations are all w3d stuff.

Thx for the constructive critics from 'some people' here. Again let's see what can be done for the next version of mammoth's animation. But having a mammoth moving one leg after another would be extremely slow... Just what I think.

Also for the 'thing' you call a dm map, it's only the empty interior of the obelisk, we have some stuff to add on that empty place now...

This doesn't justify it and by no means is a defence of Reborn, but lots of games put the ejection port on the wrong side of the gun simply so they can have the 'cool shell casins flying in your face effect' going.

Example? M4A1 and AK47 and other guns in CSS, all of which have been somehow mirrored.

I think it's done just so that people can see the cool effect or something.

<http://www.gamemun.com/preview/screenshot/csssource/1.jpg> M4A1 in CSS ...see? Get a hot casing in yer eye today! it's the latest thing! Probably why they added the paintball mask for the Counter terrorist model.....

I think just 3 adjustments could just improve it.

1: Looks too stretched, smooth it out a little so you can't see a load of occuring lines.

2: Give it a bit of wear & tear, it just looks like the turret has just come out of the factory, ready made, never been hit. There should be some dust, ash marks of something, make it blend abit more with the common terrain.

Just use a bit of imagination and you'll have it!

3: Looks a bit messy, blend it slightly

Sorry if you think I'm a pain, but I am a perfectionist

AK, your buildings are FAIRLY accurate but even you have changed things. Remember the Silo for the Source engine you created? It had NO blue on it whatsoever. Moral: small changes dont matter to the gamer who plays it. Renegade is a great game but VERY innacurate to Command and Conquer Tiberian Dawn.

Here's my thought on mod development:

If creative content designed and built for the modification exceeds the quality of the content in the original game [This means Renegade, in the case of Reborn] then that mod should be considered quite successful. To meet or succeed a paid development team as a non-profit modification team should be recognized and praised highly. Reborn's graphic content exceeds that of Renegade. So does RenAlert. Or rather, so did RenAlert. Everyone declaring "Reborn Sucks" because they do something like leave out two minor, high poly wires [DISCLAIMER: I'm not stating anyone directly used this as their basis for saying Reborn Sucks. You all know what I mean.] need to shut up.

Don't smoke crACK.

That's a great quote genius. Did you think of that all by yourself? I guess you forgot the whole concept of having a team, that way you can have one person taking care of a task while another works on something else. They could make accurate, good looking buildings if they wanted to. But they aren't, and thus they suck like usual.

Quote:It had NO blue on it whatsoever.

If it's no consequence, why are you making a three page thread out of this topic by responding to me you idiots?

I have to say, I can't help but get a swell of nostalgia from looking at that base screenshot...

Well I didn't. That was my first comment directed at you in this thread.

IRON FARTicedog90IRON FARTicedog90Please don't tell me you guys are afraid of the addition of 200 - 300 polygons.

Well we're better off without them. Gameplay matters more than having some super accurate game.

Polygons almost completely don't hurt the FPS. TRUST ME, ask Doitle, he even proved it and so have I.

How did you prove that?

Doitle ran a test on a very slow laptop that had a level with 6(?) one million polygon tanks. As it turned out, the FPS maybe went down by 1. I took pictures of my test but I have absolutely no idea where I put the images. The only proof you have from me is that I once made a 60,000 polygon level, and guess what? It still ran fine.

Why challenge me? Do you think I'm lying?

I'm guessing the way textures are tiled makes a difference?

I would imagine the way its wrapped would be harsher.

W3d is good at handling shitloads of polygons. It's not too good at handling shitloads of large textures though.

It was a 400mhz AMD K6-2 with 64 MB of Ram. It had an ATI Rage LT Pro 4mb integrated video card. It was just awful. It played Renegade at about 11 fps and the drivers I installed to play Renegade made every other game unplayable so each time I played Renegade I had to install new drivers. It was sure something... lol. Anyhow it got about 11fps in Renegade. I made the level, 6 1 million poly abrams tanks I stole off of 3dcafe I beleive. Untextured mind you, that's where all the performance comes from. Anyhow I dropped 6 of these into a basic plane in level edit, loaded the level and low and behold. I could walk around them and look at them and get them all on screen and no big slowdowns. I was shocked at my findings and still today beleive W3D has some of the best poly handling ability of any engine to date. I need to run tests on the Source engine but I can't do that until Hammer stops crashing every 30 seconds...

Yes your right, poly isnt that big of a hit when it's untextured, But..when you take an tank with excessive poly and texture it with a 512x512 texture and you drop 6 of them on the map compared to 6 lowpoly tanks with the same texture you'll see a big difference.

and because all tanks,characters,maps etc. are textured, there is a reason to keep the poly limit down, unless it's part of the map where VIS can help hide it.

so... why not use many smaller textures rather than one large texture? Unless I missed something..

I still don't believe you managed to do this. I still can't get a sphere with 50,000 polys to export without W3D Viewer crashing when viewing it. Level Edit also crashes when trying to open it.

Are you just letting it go about its buissness or are you end tasking it when you think its hung? It takes hella long to export.

Gmax has a hard time exporting meshes with uber poly counts. You would have to split it up into many different meshes, then it would export fine. This happens a lot with terrain too, you have to slice it up sometimes if the mesh is above something like 12,000 polygons.
