Yeah, I saw that on the news and was wondering what the fuck they are thinking. I mean, Cookie Monster is a classic character. How dare they fuck up his character because parents can't keep food away from their kids. This just gives another excuse for bad parents to blame television. OMG, my child is hungry all the time, SHUT DOWN FOOD NETWORK!

Perhaps it's towards himself for not being able to type out more than one word for a reply. Crimson ought to make a rule about that... The forum isn't a chat room.

How about a rule against turning every rule into a thread about how "it's a texture not a skin", "Reborn Sucks" and how Nod is spelt. :rolleyes:

As for this being a new season... what the hell ! I thought they stopped making sesame street ages ago... maybe no one in the UK has bought the rights for new episodes for like ... 10 years or something :S

j_ball430I mean, Cookie Monster is a classic character. How dare they fuck up his character because parents can't keep food away from their kids.

that isn't what it is about at all..

growing numbers of obesity make it more important to each younger generations the importance of healthy eating. I think all they are doing is teaching kids that are young and watch the programme to eat healthily....this will help them later in life as there's less chance they'll let themselves go and scoff too much junk food, getting fat or unhealthy in general.

but, I do not believe it's because of parents trying to blame someone for their lack of parenting.. the obesity rates are probably taken from kids a bit too old for that programme.

As for me, let's just say I used to be a big kid watching little kids' programmes. I still love chucklevision..

I don't see how you can think that. Who are the ones giving the kids the food to eat? I know for a fact that it's not Cookie Monster. The fact is, the parents don't have to give into their kids' wants.

Cookie monster, 'cookie's are a sometimes food', I can dig it.
As long as they don't mess with The Count, I dont care.

1 Batty bat!
2 Batty bat!
3 Batty bat!

and so on...

True but the kids are the ones doing the eating.. when they come to a certain age they will be eating not just what they have at their house, but what they want to eat outside. parents can't always control that, even at a young age (hell I've seen really young kids out in groups at KFC) weren't you already doing your own thing at like 7? as a parent i'm sure you don't "always" want to deny your children what they want, and that's a way to get addictions. I agree though that a lot of parents aren't cut out for it and do a really bad job.....I see the results of this at my work nearly every time I am there.

what I am trying to say is kids'll be encouraged to eat less if they see cookie monster eating less plus when kids are young these things will have more influence on them than when they get older.

that's all the programme is trying to achieve.. if they aren't a fan of the programme, or don't really care, then it won't affect anything. plus there is still all the other stuff in sesame street to enjoy..

Yes, but if the parents do a good enough of a job teaching their kids what are good eating habits, what they learned from Sesame Street is not going to affect them. I wasn't doing my "own thing" at 7. I was in first grade.

The influence that the Cookie Monster has on kids is easily correctable if the parents do their job.

I know, my parent did a good job.....but you can't expect every parent to do well. it's like expecting no drug addicts and neds in the country you live in. just won't happen.

also by "own thing" I meant visiting your friends' houses, having games of football and such.

Give me a fucking break. This is the stupidest thing i've seen since my school made my teacher get rid of his barby and Ken bathroom passes because they clothes they had on violated the school dress code.

Fuck fat kids, if they're parents would make them get off the computer and go run some laps they wouldn't have a problem, but oh wait fat is now a diesase so its not they're fault :rolleyes:
