I'm lookin for a new laptop, here are the specs:

- # 17inch WSXGA Wide-Screen TFT Display 1680x1050 Pixels
- # Intel® Pentium® 4 630 CPU w/ Hyper-Threading,3.0GHz,800FSB,2MB Cache, 64 Bit
- # Intel® I915 Chipset LGA775 16X PCI-E Platform Mainboard
- # 1GB PC4200 DDR2-533 SODIMM MEMORY
- # 80GB 5400RPM ULTRA ATA 100 HARD DRIVE
- # NONE - 2nd Hard Drive
- # User-Upgradable ATI Radeon X800 PCI-Express 256MB DDD3 Video Card w/ TVO & DVI
- # 8X DVD+/-RW Drive Dual Layer w/ DVD w/ DVD Recording Software
- # BUILT-IN 5.1 SURROUND SOUND

Price: $2549.00

Good, Bad, Ugly? Im not great with the Hardware but this price looked reasonable for what Im getting. I found it at <http://www.cyberpowersystem.com> and its called the GAMER XPLOER X7-9000 NOTEBOOK

Don't count on an uber long battery life with all that gear in there. The X800 is better off in your static PC, TBH. Unless you genuinely plan on gaming for small blocks of time on the go, it doesn't really serve that much a purpose.

It's worth it. You will notice a difference for sure. And 60 gigs is a lot anyway.

Like Java said, you can't do serious gaming unless you have the thing constantly plugged in.

Where are you getting it from?

<http://www.cyberpowersystem.com> and it do need it for gaming as well as school. I bring it with me to class(we have outlets all over the place, GVSU is pretty a pretty techy school). My laptop right now only has a battery life of 30 minutes so I'm used to it.

I don't mean to take this off topic, but have you bought from that company before?

I was looking on their website to buy my first prebuilt computer since 1995, and I was wondering how their customer service is etc. Are they reliable?

I have kindof..... 4 years ago I had my cousin build me up a computer for that site that my parents would buy, and he always buys from that website so I assume its got good customer service.

That computer is still used in my house btw and its just now getting out of date.
