Hey gang - Sorry that I haven't been around last few weeks - I've been real involved with this new racing sim called GTR FIA <http://www.gtr-game.com>

Cars are my first passion & it's kinda nice to do something different w/ CP gaming for a bit.

Awesome simulation by the way & not for the casual driving gamer as it has a big learning curve.

If you have the patience for it, it's awesome though. I've been hangin' out in the Simbin GTR forums as "W.P. Parks"...

Maybe see one of y'all there sometime...? Of course I'll always be a Renegade junkie

I not much of a racing fan purely because of the fact that it just bores me after the second day of playing a racing game. I think the reason for that would be that it is the same thing over and over again. Just going around a track with a car. But I guess that concept could apply to other games aswell. But anyhoot, I am just not a racing fan.

Unless it is motocross.

I love cars, I also love laughing at films like "Gone in 60 seconds" and "The fast and the furious" especially because in the latter films one guy's car is starting to tear apart at 130mph, now that same car here in Britain I know can whip that 130mph as standard..

Yeah, like I said it's not for the casual PC racer - These cars are as close to the real deal as a sim can get at present. The first couple of days I spent time just practicing making a complete lap without losing control. My first online race last pm I made 11th place outta 16! Oh & the other thing is that hardly any onliners speak English as the game has not had a US release yet. I can tell when they are cussing me though...

You can get demo at <http://www.gtr-game.com> & I ordered full European version from <http://www.gogamer.com>
US version is scheduled to release May 1st.
