Has anyone else ever had one of those days, where you spend two hours doing work on something that was meant to take about half that time, and suddenly the program your working with just shuts down on you?

That happened to me before... But the program I work in automatically saves to a backup folder every few minutes and I didn't lose anything.

About a week ago I was rendering my 10-15min video for a 75min presentation the next day and the power went out. I had to get up at 4am to get everything done. If the power hadn't gone out it would've been fine.
