I've since installed cathode lights too.

2.6GHz Pentium 4. (shit). When I get a new job I'll be saving up for a 3.8GHz
256MB GeForce 6800 GT
1024MB PCI2700 DDR RAM
80Gb seagate Hard Drive
External 160Gb Hard drive with scheduled backups.
512kbps connection (shit)

Not great but it does the job.

You people drink too much Coke.
Try water, is doesn't dehydrate you (yes, Coke, like most caffeinated drinks and full-o-sugar drinks does indeed dehydrate you).

Nice desktops, I especially love danpaul's dual display.

I'll post new pics on Thursday when I have my new DVD and floppy drive installed (black so they fit in with the black case instead of grey). It'll have my uber rotating £1 lazer in it too. Hopefully I'll have tidied up all those wires to, ugh what a mess. Maybe I'll move the cathodes round a bit, they aren't too visible atm.

Because Dell sucks, their computers suck, their prices suck, and their tech support SUCKS (trust me, my friend has a Dell laptop and over time several parts died. Each time Dell never sent him replacements even though they called and said they would).

Alienware makes one heck of a gaming computer.

basically you want a computer that has a large amount of memory separate video and sound cards with large amount of memory a fast chip, amd is my preference, but intel is ok.

if you go with amd a 3200+ minimum, anything 64 bit will work, and intel make sure that it's a hyperthreading chip and you will be fine. getting the 3ghz celeron is NOT okay, the 3ghz celeron is equal to the 386 that I have in my basement (not hooked up, just never thrown out). well, maybe not equal, the 386 may be faster then the celeron.

People that build here can give you the actual model #'s of the items to get, and then just borrow a friends windows disk. I use windows 2000 professional on half of my computers, and XP pro on the others. they both have their ups and downs, Using NT on one of mine and it sucks, but it's only storage now.

I will post a pic of my desk tomorrow, nothing special tho.

320 GB of Hard-Disk memory
512 Megs DDR 333Mhz RAM
Dual processors at 5500 MHz
GeForceFX 5200 128MB DDR 8x w/Monitor Graphics accelerator.

Btw, i have NO CLUE other then the memory...the computer is good, i just want better.

The computer you have will work fine. I'd just recommend upgrading your memory (from 512MB to at minimum 1024MB) and your video card (from 128MB to at minimum 256MB). That will give you a large boost in gaming performance.

Use your money to buy a decent anti-virus and anti-spyware. Combine that with hiring someone to install them properly after a hard format. That should make it faster and it will cost you less than buying a new one. And it'll make your parents love you even more!

16x DVD drive
Floppy drive
80GB Hard Drive (will be upgrading that too soon)
160GB External hard drive for backups
Cathode lights, lazer, LEDs etc.
4 case fans.

I'm saving up at the moment to upgrade to these. Maybe better

Don't waste your money on an Alienware computer. Everyone thinks they're the best, but that's just an ignorant opinion. They're just like customizing your own computer except that you're not building it and the prices are jacked up really high. You can make your own computer that's just as good as one of the Alienware computers for much less.

DJM, nice selection, but I'd get a motherboard that's nForce 4 if I were you.

I've been rethinking this so I need your input. Especially since half the time I don't have a clue what I'm doing when building computers.

I basically want to know, will the parts from EBuyer work with each other? Or are they incompatible for some reason?

Are there specific features of these parts that wont be utilised by that mobo?

etc.

Buying parts from other places in almost all cases these days makes no difference. There are really no proprietary computer systems around anymore. Most parts, if compatible of course, will work with most other parts. There are the occasional conflicts, but for the most part it should work.

I think if it were a MESSIEST desk contest, I'd come in a pretty good place. Most of yours are all prim and nice and vacuumed. What is the deal with that!?
