<http://hub.n00bstories.com/>

<http://www.cia.gov/>

Explain.

Searching for hub.n00bstories.com A record at ns1.n00bstories.com. [67.19.143.5]: Got CNAME of www.cia.gov. and referral to b.root-servers.net [took 307 ms]

Lame (and potentially illegal) attempt on Crimson's part to her hub from DDoS attacks. I can understand adding an a record to a 169.254.32.43 or similar (Per RFC 3330), but the CIA isn't going to be happy if they figure out your DNS server caused them to get attacked. Oh well, her network.

I don't see how it would be illegal. n00bstories.com is Crimson's domain, she should be legally allowed to do whatever the hell she wants to do with it, whether it points to her servers, to nowhere, or to somewhere else (including government sites).

Eh, I'm not sure there's a law on it, but I imagine you could be liable for some damages if you're setting CNAMEs to addresses you don't control to stop attacks.

If anyone is retarded enough to send an attack to "hub.n00bstories.com" without cross-checking the IP, the feds aren't going to come after ME about it. I've had that set up for like 2 years now. It's basically a message to anyone with an IQ higher than 85 that you're not going to get my IRC hub IP that easily.

You got any info of someone already attacking that IP?
